PROMISE OF GRADUAL PROGRESS IN RACING

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Racing at Tanforan begins in a few weeks. With the sport so close at hand it is undoubtedly worth while to make at least a partial review of the achievementts at our home course and to look into the future a bit. Right at the start it might be said that expansion of the breeding industry holds hope of rapid development in the character of the racing, with that intangible, usually denominated "class" becoming more prominent as time goes on.

More than ten years ago the effort to establish the sport took definite shape. With varied fortune attending the early maneuvers things crystallized sufficiently in the spring of 1930 to put on a short meeting—the shortest of all, in fact, in the series since the inception of racing. There were only twelve days in that period of the enthralling pastime. Developments followed fast and in the following years the sessions were of longer duration. Good horses raced here and popular interest constantly increased.

Changing over from the voluntary system, as it may be called, of the first meetings, to the control of a state board has brought about many problems of vital concern to the public, and those problems are in process of solution. Without fear of reasonable contradiction it may be said the fate of the sport in the state depends on the adoption of a broad, sportsmanlike attitude by those in authority. Procedure that may be well enough in the marts of trade is not applicable to the race track. Racing is a sport and if not conducted as a sport, but with some ulterior object in view, will soon fade away.

Looking at the matter realistically, I should say we must have two things done before very long: encouragement of breeding by the establishment of a bureau making stallions available to farmers up and down the state and the limitation of the length of meetings.

Organization of a State Breeding Bureau would do wonders in making the sport permanent. It would not only be a wise move in itself, but would show the people that the race meetings are put on both for their amusement and for the building up of a desirable type of light horse.

No session should be permitted for more than thirty days. Both from the point of view of maintaining the sport on a healthful plane and from the peculiarly sensitive angle of public sentiment long meetings should be taboo. Anything longer than thirty days is recognized by the people for what it is essentially: a scheme of dividend-mad promoters.

ALASKA WILL HAVE BRILLIANT GROWTH

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work

In my pamphlet "Gold Mining and Unemployment" I said:

"Don't let anyone tell you all the gold was taken out of Alaska in the rushes of thirty and forty years ago. THE SURFACE WAS ONLY SCRATCHED."

Now comes William Sulzer, declaring that the incalcuable resources within the borders of Alaska have only been scratched here and there. Sulzer, a former governor of the state of New York, makes a trip up north once or twice a year to inspect his mining properties and is well qualified to speak on Alaska's probable ftuure. In developing his thought Sulzer has been quoted as saying:

"In the next fifty years Alaska should have a population of from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000. The vast territory looms larger in the public eye than at any time in its history."

In last week's issue I wrote a few lines in commendation of the new federal banking law. That statute goes a long way in providing credit for those entitled to that very necessary thing in modern finance. The confusion as to the exact nature of money and credit has lasted a long time, but the atmosphere is fast clearing, both in the United States and in Canada. Here is an idea from the Vancouver Sun that worth quite a bit of pondering:

"Time and time again this publication has pointed out that money is no longer a fixity or a property, but that money is a function. Time and time again, we have argued that it is the fixation of money that is responsible for much of the economic collapse."

It is not at all an absurd notion that people are beginning to rely for leadership not upon those who promise vague reforms and who expend their evangelical talents in torrents of protest and abuse, but upon those who are working out plans for reducing the wages of money and putting the nation's credit to useful work.

Even such an enemy of the Roosevelt administration as Ogden Mills admits what has been passing for a credit system is not perfect. In a recent onslaught on the extremely liberal administration at Washington, Mills said that both our banking structures and banking practices should be reformed, pointing out that the whole credit of the country should never again be available for a nation-wide speculation.

In reading nearly the entire address of Mills, however, where he sees coercion in the comprehensive program of the administration to save the country from ruin and just as foolishly pretends to see a plot to rule industry, one cannot help but think of the wise words of Dean Swift given to the world many years ago in an allegory about the bee and the spider: "The spider, having swelled himself into the size and posture of a disputant, began his argument in the true spirit of controversy, with a resolution to be highly scurrilous, to urge on his own reasons, without the least regard to the answers or objections of his opposite; and fully predetermined in his mind against all conviction."

A large part of the federal government's imported silver is being brought to San Francisco for storage. Half of four late shipments from England to New York was transshipped here. A shipment is usually from 5,500,000 to 10,000,000 ounces.

TOPS EVERYTHING IN GREAT SHOW

Crawford and Montgomery Sparkle In New Comedy On Married Life

In a story that fairly bubbles with comedy, Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery come to the Daly City Theater Monday and Tuesday, September 9 and 10, in "No More Ladies," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production directed by Edward H. Griffith.

Adapted from the Broadway stage hit, the film retains all the fine drama and sparkling humor of the original—with the addition of one of the finest screen casts of the year.

When Marcia Townsend (Joan Crawford), marries Sherry Warren (Robert Montgomery), she knows his past; but they are sure that, in spite of their many "happily divorced" friends, they can make marriage work.

When, later, Marcia discovers she may have made a mistake, she decides to dry her tears and throw a party. And what a party! All Sherry's ex-sweethearts are invited with their new swains and ex-husbands. That it doesn't turn out exactly as Marcia planned, shapes the drama of the picture; and meanwhile the funniest party scenes ever filmed hold the screen.

The second attraction is "Behind Green Lights," with Norman Foster and Judith Allen.

EAST WILL SEND GOOD GALLOPERS TO HOME TRACK

Large Number Is Expected Soon To Be Stabled At Tanforan Course

Winners on Eastern tracks will begin to leave for Tanforan in a few days, according to word received at the San Bruno course. On Tuesday shipments were under way to Tanforan from Pleasanton and other near by tracks. A number of the Pleasanton brigade are candidates for the stakes to be run at the Tanforan meeting to open Saturday, October 5.

Dr. H. F. Little has written that his Center Lane and Red Mountain and two others will be shipped to Tanforan from the East. Center Lane, a recent victor at Narragansett in good company, will be in the Little string. Center Lane is a five year old gelding by Flying Ebony and is a handy performer at one mile and one furlong or one mile and a sixteenth. Red Mountain earned brackets at Detroit.

Mrs. William C. Van Antwerp of Burlingame purchased Flying Ebony, winner of the Kentucky Derby, last month, and before many weeks the stallion will be on the way to the Alisal ranch of C. E. Perkins at Santa Barbara. Flying Ebony is a notable addition to the stock horses in the West. While standing in the East the stallion sired Dark Secret, Flying Heels, Vicar, Center Lane and other good ones.

Nine horses in training owned by J. W. Marchbank were shipped from Heather Farm to Tanforan, Wednesday of this week. Trainer Kay Spence reports the undefeated Maid of Perth and Orra, Lady Florise, Cantrip and other clever runners have been going along well in training operations on the farm track.

P. M. Anderson, track superintendent at Tanforan, is making progress in preparing the plant for the coming meeting. Anderson promises everything will be in first class condition for the opening.

GRAND BENEFIT DANCE WILL BE SEASON'S EVENT

Expect Largest Crowd Ever Assembled At Tanforan For Social Affair

Tomorrow (Saturday) evening is the time most of us have been looking forward to for weeks. Whether we are young or old, we must frankly admit if honest with ourselves, that we do love to dance. All we need is a bit of stirrin' music and our feet will do the rest.

And, girls, if you haven't a formal, don't let that keep you away; for you'll be welcome in any type of costume, and be sure and be there. Come early, forget your worries and your cares. Make the Edmond L. Heim Benefit Dance a red letter affair, one that will brighten the future, too, for many moons to come.

The city employes and many friends have worked hard to put over one of the biggest parties of the season. Now it is up to the rest of us to finish the job by being on hand with the old "Hey Hey" and a cheery smile. Let's put this "over the top" in a big way.

Nuff sed! Let's all get together and mingle.

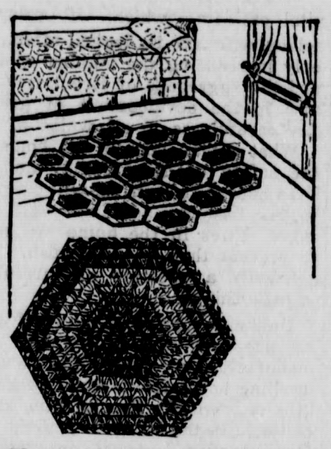
Different Ways of Making Rugs

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



The making of rag rugs has interested needleworkers for hundreds of years. One very good reason for this is that rugs are practical and wanted in every home. The larger the rug the harder the work; the weight increases as the work progresses. Making a rug of motifs and then assembling takes the hard labor out of rug making and the work becomes interesting. Work these motifs in spare time at home or elsewhere and, when all are finished, assemble.

Folder No. 532 contains a lot of information about making the hexagon motif in various sizes in hexagon shaped rugs and in various color combinations. Hexagon motifs are crocheted in any size and color scheme according to your own idea. Amount of material and all the stitches are given and other hints of value to rug makers. A new kind of chart for selecting your colors gives you an opportunity to see what your rug looks like before you go ahead with the work. You can get some wonderful ideas from this folder on "Different Ways to Make Rugs." It will be mailed to you upon receipt of 10 cents.

Anxious that he can represent his country in the 31-mile walk at the next Olympic games in Berlin, Germany, 1936, an eighteen-year-old college boy in New Zealand walked from his home in Auckland to Wellington, a distance of 450 miles, in 10 days. He then walked back by another route.

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's criticism of his idle life, and the withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, son of a wealthy banker, finds himself practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which he must reach, from New York, within a definite time limit. He takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. With five other members of the party, an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Giles Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack, he starts his journey. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he distrusts Crack. He finds his intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, at a stopping place, Hal is directed to Barry's room, instead of his own. Barry drops her unfriendliness and they exchange kisses. Next day he tells her he loves her. She answers that she mustn't love him, without giving any reason. Crack brutally insults Kerrigan. Hal forces him to apologize abjectly, and his feeling of enmity and disgust toward Crack is intensified.

Then, before the sun had finished its pitiless climbing, the road dropped past a gathering of bluffs with a look of Indian fighting and a more recent frontier, and came to Council Bluffs, to the broad bed of the Missouri river with its flats blackish and dry like emery, and to the end of Iowa. Across the river, there was the solidity, clamor, and business of Omaha—the first metropolis in so many swift miles that Hal for once felt like a countryman, come to gape at the sights. But black-and-white route numbers under Nebraska's covered wagon marked an escape from such frailty; and they started for Lincoln, which Kerrigan assured Hal was not on a longer way and contained something worth looking at.

It did. Straight up into the hot, broad Nebraska afternoon, a slit shaft of gray rose, dry and clean-sided, from the terrace of a square-spread building. And where the high shaft ended in its gold, blunt cap a Sower crooked his bronze arm full-muscled, a fat seedbag slung to the faintly arrogant rhythm of his shoulders, his walk sure and familiar upon the earth that received the strewn handfuls and would give them back to his labor.

Pulsipher said, "Tha—tha—that's the new state capitol, ain't it?"

"What would it be, old Gaunt," Kerrigan growled from the cigarette-corner of his mouth: "the Mauretania?"

After lunch, Barry came to the front seat beside Hal, Doc leaping eagerly to her lap.

"Kerrigan says I'm to sit here," she said.

"Bless Kerrigan," said Hal.

"He's an old peach," said Barry softly. "And he likes you a little, I think. I wonder why." Then, more freshly, "Hal, could we drive down to the capitol for one closer look at it?"

"Let's," said Hal. "Won't take a minute. You know the real way to make up your mind about it would be to sleep on your first look and see it again in the morning."

"I've made up my mind," said Barry. "I think it's grand. I could do without some of those names around the outside, and the gold behind that relief of the covered wagon over the door, and I don't think the buffaloes beside the steps are strong enough, but—"

"But outside of that you like it," said Hal, grinning. "When you get to be as old as I, you'll know one look isn't—"

"Get to be as old as—" she said, affecting difficulty with her smile. "Why, darn you, I'm old enough to be your—"

"Daughter, in some ways," said Hal blandly.

"Would you rather I changed places again?" she said. "I'm darned if I'll be put in my place by you—a mere—a mere—"

"A 'mere' will do," said Hal. "I've never been called that before, but I like it."

"What d'you know about life, anyway?" she said, rueful mockery of anger in her eyes.

Hal stopped to watch the slowly passing features of the building and said: "Well, I had a parrot during the psittacosis scare: fear of his getting the fever aged me a good deal."

"A parrot?" said Barry, quickly brightened. "Gosh, how I've wanted a parrot! All my life. Was he fun?"

"An absolute genius," said Hal. "When we get to Los Angeles, I'll telegraph for him and you shall have him." With the others all leaning to the windows, Hal turned to her and held her sobered eyes with all the eagerness which her near, actual presence commanded. "Barry," he said quickly, and very low; "I love you. I haven't told you today, and it's harder because it's more than yesterday—so much more that—"

"That you'd give me your parrot," said Barry, and a brittle stillness held her eyes, a wooden quality the lovely lips that said it.

Hal's look hardened in the shock of that treachery to his tenderness. "At least," he said after a clouded second, "you don't look as though you thought that was so funny. Why the devil did you say it?" Where had that wretched, stealthy shadow come from?

She let out the last of her breath and turned her head helplessly, staring off through the windshield while a little shining wet rimmed her lower lids. Then she leaned partly across him, as if for a last look at the capitol, her hand coming to his and taking tight hold.

"Darling, it's no use," she hurried out, so that he could barely hear her. "I'm not big enough, good enough, to pretend I don't love you. I never thought this would happen to me—never thought I'd be so scared and cowardly. It would be simple if I were strong—and it couldn't hurt any worse. Darling, we mustn't talk about it now any more. Tonight I'll tell you, my dearest—dearest: I promise I'll tell you tonight."

He kept her hand for another instant of baffled happiness, after her hold relaxed; then she leaned away, turning toward the back and saying quite coolly, "Kerrigan, did you like that statue of Lincoln on the other side?"

* * * * * * *

They talked or not, as the moment was meant; but either way Hal knew that Barry and he were more profoundly together there—in a closeness that grew mature and strong, ready for more thrilling aspiration. Now she had said she loved him; and with that bright finality, he belted firm his prowess against any mysteries, any obstacles.

At Grand Island they crossed the Platte river—blue water among the biscuit-colored flats where you might still find the fording tracks of the covered wagons; and Rasputin droned away on Route 30 again, with the river hidden low to southward, the straight, gaunt line of the Union Pacific dwindling ahead to the hot horizon, and the lone red-and-white pylons of the air-beacons ready to police the night.

The vigilant welcome of Barry's eyes was quickest for the live things: the red-headed, white-tailed flash of a woodpecker drew her quick "Ahhh" of tribute; the fat-bellied little creatures that scurried across the road with tremendous haste but no speed, like small mechanical toys, stirred her soft chuckling; and she called Hal and Kerrigan to admire the lonely wisdom of the single kingfishers watching from the telegraph line above the marshy ditches. The mortality here was enormous, the road continually patched with torn fur and crushed feathers; and once a swift bird swooped in a lovely arc to deliver his small, mortal impact against Rasputin's hood; Barry's muffled cry of compassion had Hal's foot hard on the brakes.

"He's dead, surely?" she said, glancing backward.

"'Fraid so," said Kerrigan.

"I'll stop if you like," said Hal.

"No," said Barry sadly, "but it seems such a poor death for him."

The sun was lower, but it was still blazing hot when they rushed by the little group that walked a shadeless, long stretch of the road. The farmer's overalls were new, his shirt white; the child asleep in his crooked brown arms wore a fresh dress, and the printed pajamas of the two elder girls following were bright and clean. Hal's thought was of the meanness of having raised that corridor of dust for them to walk in; and as he turned to speak it to Barry, Crack's indolent voice came quickly to his ear: "Notice the kid in his arms?"

"Yes," said Hal, with a short, unwelcoming nod; he hadn't thought of Crack for an hour.

There was a flat quality in Crack's next speech, as if he had exhausted the matter's interest. "It was dead," he said.

Hal suddenly felt that Crack, if he wanted to, could frighten him, and he turned aside in quick anger to mutter. "D—n it, you don't know that."

"I saw the kid," said Crack in listless obstinacy; "it was dead."

Contempt, low and briefly savage, smoldered under Barry's quick "It was not dead." Her eyes were blazing even after they had left Crack, as if what he had said were personal to her; her pursed lips lay unwillingly together, as if she tasted something turn bitter in her mouth. Crack said nothing.

Hal tried again to capture the certainty that his tainted hatred of Crack was defined within the forgettable episode of last night. It couldn't be a slowly crescent thing, begun at the journey's start. Crack was too insignificant. It must all be Hal's own reaction to a long day of driving, with the trip-window of the speedometer near a fifth fresh start. The temptation to look around at Crack, to see if his undistinguished face were still basking in the shy pleasure of things he privately knew—that persistent temptation was part of fatigue, part of his taut impatience for the night's stop and for Barry. So too were these other dim, self-conceived bogies; an unconnected wonder whether Crack might be biding his time for some little weapon of revenge for humiliation; and that old-maid's sense of a thickening imminence stealthily preparing to come upon them, just as on the long horizon there behind, the dark was preparing.

As the sun sank, the skin of a minutely detailed range of hills to the southward—tiny, like a Rockwell Kent drawing on ticket tape—turned gradually from dry, sparse green to pale copper, with sharp-edged, blue-purple shadows defined in the tight gullies. All round the plains' far edges there were wisps and drifts and high tumbles of cloud pinkened by the sun, and a lofty pile in the southeast registered the climbing shadow of evening. Then it was twilight, and somewhere under the heavy cloudbank ahead silent lightning darted.

They dined in North Platte. If it wasn't raining afterward, they would try to make a place called Ogallala, for the night.

Just before they drew up at the hotel, Barry murmured, "I'd like to wash a little, and leave Doc. Shall I meet you down here?"

"Right," said Hal, with the brittle apprehension that unless they hurried something would happen to stop them.

Barry stood there so straight and cool, talking to Kerrigan, while Hal's hasty fingers slipped on the knots of the luggage lashing. And only when the bags were down did she go into the hotel and upstairs.

The hall was hot, but Hal's well-used, unadorned room was ten degrees hotter. He slapped the radiator in passing: it was warm to touch. It occurred to him that the management might be heat-maddened to the point of running a summer furnace—until he found that the washstand, the chipped white iron of the bed, and the painted walls were all warmer than the room's atmosphere. He washed quickly and hurried down to the car again, half certain that Sister Anastasia would appear to tell him Barry was too tired to go out so late. It was already eleven.

But Barry came—alone, hatless, a reticent smile pretending to ignore the seriousness of her brave eyes. "I haven't been long, have I?" she said, squeezing his wrist as she came to him.

"Too long," he said. "Anything's too long. It's all too long. I've had twenty-six years without you, and I grudge every d—d moment."

She bowed her head, her lips involuntarily parted to reply. But she didn't. Instead she said, "You've found where the garage is?" And she added quickly: "I don't give a darn where it is. Oh, Hal, be gentle with me: help me."

The garage was just around the corner, and beyond it the town ended nakedly, the street swallowed by the dark plains like a road running into the edge of a flood. The last house was dark: they hadn't to go far to be alone. And when they stopped, Barry parted his hands with hers, leaned back between them, and joined them before her.

"Hal," she said on a wary sigh of comfort, "I'll tell you a story."

"I know a story," he whispered against her hair. "Is it about you?"

"It's about a girl much younger than I," she said: "younger in everything."

"Then why should I hear it?"

"Because it's a sort of test," Barry said. "We don't know each other so—so very well, do we? There's something I need to know before I tell you what I have to tell you. You listen to the story and tell me what you think—and then I'll know."

"Barry, it would keep," said Hal. "Tell me some other time—after we're together, alone, for good."

She pressed his hands harder against her firmness, her head turning so that her smooth cheek ran under his lips. "No," she said, and he could tell from her voice that her eyes must be closed. "Please, Hal—now."

"All right," he said. "As a favor, Barry, which I shall want returned."

"This girl," Barry began at once, but quietly: "this girl lived on the same street I did, at home; I knew her well. It doesn't matter what she looked like, except that she was pretty—perhaps before she should have been. Her father was in the bank, on town boards, a vestryman in the church. She thought she understood him, she loved him very much, and she tried to be everything to him as he was everything to her. She knew he had started humbly in his life and she knew how proud he was of the trust and respect he had in the town, how carefully he had built it all up around him and in himself. And she was proud of that for both of them. But she knew hardly anything else about him, except what she saw, because once when she asked about her mother, he made it plain in his gentle way that she wasn't to ask questions, that some day he would tell her everything she needed to know."

Barry's pressure against him relaxed a little.

Earl Cramer, egotistic young "murder master," has been officially charged with the murder of James C. Kennett, retired Chicago contractor. The killing took place at Fulda Flats, near Auburn, Kennett's body being recovered from a mine shaft with grappling hooks.

"A great aggregation of ivory domes have been assembled under the capitol dome in Washington, D. C.," declared Dr. F. E. Townsend, father of the $200 a month old age pension idea, to an audience of 30,000 at San Diego. He was berating Congress for refusing to adopt his plan.

California, and in fact, the whole country, is backing the plan to raise a permanent, national memorial for Will Rogers. Newspapers and theaters have received hundreds of inquiries asking where contributions might be sent.

Mack Swain, 59, pioneer of the pie-slinging era in motion pictures, died of a hemorrhage while en route from Chicago to Hollywood. His last film appearance was with Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush."

Forest fires in Shasta County have blackened 20,000 acres, including 5,000 acres of timber. This is the largest fire loss reported to State Forester M. B. Pratt this year. Several of the fires have been of incendiary origin.

Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes ruled that San Francisco has violated the Raker Act, by which the city in 1913 gained the right to use power and water from the Hetch Hetchy, by selling electric power from the Hetch Hetchy Dam to the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. The city has the choice of fighting Ickes or of establishing its own power distributing system.

California is leading the nation in the rehabilitation of property. According to Clifford C. Anglim, FHA district director, $10,000,000 has been taken from the Bank of America vaults alone for rehabilitation work. These loans provided 5,905,250 man hours of work.

Santa Rosa continued in a state of unrest following mimeographed Communist notes strewn in the business district defying the vigilantes who have been seeking to rid Sonoma County of radicals. Meanwhile a state investigation of the vigilante raids in which two men were tarred and feathered was being conducted by Attorney General U. S. Webb.

Collection of a one cent sales tax on a 15 cent purchase will continue in California, at least for the present, despite the ruling of Justice Joseph Shell of San Diego that such a tax collection is in excess of 6 per cent, instead of 3, as provided in the sales tax act, and that it therefore violates the U. S. Constitution. A State Supreme Court test of the tax will come up in four or five months.

Fingerprinting of all retail liquor dealers in California has been recommended by Orfa Jean Schontz, one of the five members of the Board of Equalization. This would "make it virtually impossible for persons with criminal records to engage legitimately in the liquor business."

Washington is considering 100 million dollars worth of work projects in California WPA applications. A portion of these applications has been approved, and it is hoped by state relief officials that the WPA will soon put thousands of Californians now on direct dole back on jobs.

At the first conference since Leo R. Friedman entered the case, attorneys for David A. Lamson agreed to petition the Santa Clara County Supreme Court for a change of venue for their client's third trial on a charge of wife murder. Trial is scheduled for September 23 before Judge R. R. Syer.

California autoists will have to pay a double value tax on their cars for the first half of 1936. Motorists have already paid a city and county property tax for this fiscal year. Beginning in January, they must pay a state property tax on their cars. Hereafter there will be no city or county property levies on autos.

San Francisco's grand jury has voted to indict Sam Darcy, California's Communist No. 1, and Juan Diaz on charges of perjury. Darcy, who ran for governor in this state last year, is at present in Russia, and Diaz is due for parole from McNeil Island penitentiary, where he is serving a term on perjury charges. Charges against them show that both swore they were born in the U. S. and neither was.

Oldest Law Court

Careful and delicate repairs have been necessitated at the Palais de Justice by the recent fire, which was fortunately restricted to one of the towers. This Tour St. Louis was known in medieval times as the "Bon Bec" or "Bavarde," since it was used as a torture chamber in which confessions were wrung from unwilling witnesses.

The Palais is by far the oldest law court in the world. Justice has been dispensed there for well over 2,000 years, for it was there that the Roman praeor Luettia set up his court. Visitors to the Palais are generally told how the young Louis XIV, booted and spurred, strode into the hall, crying "L'Etat c'est moi" (I am the State), and how Marie Antoinette here heard her doom.—Baltimore Sun.

Municipal Cat Farm

The Paris municipal council has decided to establish a "stud" farm for cats. It will be placed under the care of an expert, whose duty it will be to carry out a process of selection. From an administrative point of view, the only cat worth breeding is one whose instinct is to kill rats, an instinct which is not innate in all cats, and the ultimate purpose of the farm is to produce a supply of pedigreed ratters.

MILL HEADS AND TAILINGS

Versatile Writer In Review Of Conditions Points Way To Make Best Of Available Assets.

(By Sidney Norman)

Since last week I have journeyed over two thousand miles and seen for myself unmistakable evidences of coming prosperity in Alberta—that is if the political pot does not boil over and spoil everything, as it frequently does.

The country lying south of Calgary, clear to the international line, was a smiling land indeed, with all grain crops in fine condition and promising a heavy yield.

What I was particularly interested in are the "wildcatting" oil operations going on in many directions throughout the province and I have no hesitation in prophesying that some day soon Canada will awaken to find herself far richer through resources in Alberta.

Across the line, almost within stone's throw, two important fields have been developed against laughter and great odds and there is no apparent geological reason why similar success should not reward intelligent work on the Canadian side.

What that would mean to the immediate section, the entire province and the whole of Canada, can be readily understood by anyone who has knowledge of the tremendous expansion witnessed in the United States in recent years.

The dominant thought carried away by me was that here is one of the finest opportunities ever offered to the Dominion Government to get behind an effort of outstanding importance to every man, woman and child within the borders of this great undeveloped country.

Let the government offer rewards for the first commercial wells of crude oil or agree to pay the total cost of the first 100 commercial wells and thus help along progressive development.

Canada sends out over $30,000,000 every year for crude petroleum and its derivatives and yet, within its own borders, crying for help, lies one of the most promising oil fields to be found on the North American continent.

True, oil is where you find it; only the drill can answer the question, but when geological conditions are inviting, it is nothing short of a crime that something big and encouraging is not done.

Let is be remembered that the big oil companies now controlling the business in Canada are not interested in finding fields close at hand.

They naturally prefer to bring supplies from afar, meanwhile holding up prices to the topnotch. They merely offset independent wildcat efforts and thus stand to win by the work of others, and lose nothing if they fail.

Oil is a necessity. Nothing could bring such prosperity to Canada as discovery of adequate domestic supplies.

But I enjoyed an even greater pleasure and privilege than inspecting waving fields and oil wells during that Alberta excursion. I looked into the still-smiling face of a dear old lady, now close to 100 years old, and felt the pressure of her withering hand as she wished me luck at parting.

There, indeed is a real pioneer, and I was introduced to her by her great grandson of 30 and met her own son, now a mere stripling of 75. He says he is the only man of his age in Alberta or Canada who had the pleasure of eating breakfast with his own mother on his last birthday. And I did not doubt him.

Mrs. Catherine Pilling of Cardston, was born a Miss Adams in Adams County, Illinois, back in 1838, and 13 years later journeyed by covered wagon across the plains to her new home in Salt Lake City, reaching there three years after Brigham Young had led his faithful band of Latter Day Saints into the peace of the Wasatch Mountains and founded the city by the Great Salt Lake.

She was married at an early age and in 1889 crossed the line into Canada with her husband and children, settling on the St. Mary's River, north of Kimball.

There she has been ever since and it is said of her that no woman in the West has extended greater hospitality or given away more meals to wayfares than has she in the years that have passed, and during which Alberta has been peopled with hardy stock, principally from the south.

She is the mother of ten children, the grandmother of 63, the great grandmother of 166 and the great-great-grandmother of 20—verily a whole tribe in themselves.

As I heard her talk, struggling against slight lapses of memory, ever cheerful and always with a touch of humor, I thought of the tremendous changes she has witnessed, how greatly the tempo of life has been speeded up.

Her span has compassed construction of every transcontinental railroad in America. She has seen kerosene displace the tallow candle and electric light supplant all other illuminants. She has seen the steam engine, the telephone, the telegraph, the radio, the automobile and the airplane take the place of the Pony Express runners of her early days.

She has outlived 25 presidents of the United States and was born one year after Queen Victoria ascended the throne. In Canada she has lived under England's beloved Queen, King Edward VII and King George V. She was 29 when Confederation came and has been in Alberta six years before it assumed the dignity of a separate province.

What could one wish to a pioneer of her kind ?Long life? That she has had! So I wishde her the power to retain her sense of humor and the devotion of her descendants to the end.

Through the courtesy of this old lady's son, and another elder of the Mormon Church, J. Y. Card, I was granted the privilege of a visit to the temple, a beautiful pile of granite minded, by the bye, at Nelson.

Severely plain inside, but finished exquisitely in woods of many kinds, it carries the air for which it was intended—one of sacredness to a religious cause.

Surrounding it are lovely gardens, a riot of summer blooms, and on its outer walls sculptured illustrations of the Book of Mormon.

It reminded me of another temple, very simple in architecture, at Mesa, Arizona, which I have passed many a time on my peregrinations in that state. It stands within sight of the Superstition Mountains, whence comes a never-dying story of a lost gold mine of fabulous richness.

Altogether, my brief visit to Cardston was an experience that will live and I carried away with me a high opinion of the sobriety, the kindliness, the industriousness and the tremendous pioneering accomplishments of a people driven by persecution from the Middle West and who have upheld the banner of their religious faith through the vicissitudes of a hundred years.

Since the time I was in Calgary, over 18 months ago, a great change has come over the picture, and in my opinion it is far and away the most attractive inland city in the Canadian west.

Practically all signs of depression have been erased succeeded by a contaminating spirit of optimism, reflected on the faces of the street crowds.

Crops are in excellent condition in the western part of the province and at no time has "wildcatting" been more widespread or more full of promise.

Turner Valley has settled down to steady production, without the promotional hurrah of earlier days, and that is by no means an unmixed evil, in the opinion of those who have faith in the ultimate discovery of crude oil fields, since the adventurous have been forced further afield, with promise that their efforts will come to fruition in the very near future.

It is my firm belief that the day is not far off when Calgary will relive the glamorous days of early 1914, just before the horrors of war engulfed the world, and when the first oil boom burst full force upon the little town and re-echoed throughout Canada and the United States.

In those busy days promoters took in money by the waste-paper-basketfull and the Dingman well was known from coast to coast. Tough days have followed as they have in every other city east or west, but Calgary "has the goods" and has worried through in far better shape than most other cities I know.

Once more, let me predict that the day is not far distant when the cry of "Oil" will again be heard in the land, bringing back prosperity with a bang, not only to the oil center of the Canadian West, but to all the people of this storehouse of natural resources called Canada.

WEEKLY BULLETIN

FIRE PREVENTION

By Chief A. P. Chesney

Fire prevention in the home is a vital problem, which, if properly solved, will have its logical effect, not only in reducing the number of fires and the aggregate of fire losses, but also in the development of greater fire carefulness in all walks of life.

What a man does in his home for the safety of his property and the lives housed therein, he will carry into his business activities and relations. Fires in the home are easier to prevent than to extinguish. It is primarily a question of carefulness in little things.

Unlike factory fires, many of which are due to causes insparable from manufacturing, practically every dwelling house fire is due to carelessness or neglect. Special care should be taken in the home to prevent fires from starting because, once started, there is seldom a man at hand to extinguish them.

Where women and defenseless children are housed every human consideration demands utmost vigilance on the part of those responsible for their welfare.

HOME TOWN TEAM ELIMINATED

Club Captain Excels At Bat And In The Field In Both Contests

(By Al Gould)

The Daly City Tanforan club was eliminated from play in the State Semi-Pro Baseball Tournament at the Oakland Coast League ball park in two closely contested games, with Martin's East Side and the Thirtieth Infantry, respectively.

The local team not only outhit their opponents in the first game, but outplayed them on the field; still we find them on the short end of the score—by reason of that most detested pest of baseball—BREAKS!

When one realizes that the victors of the first game had mowed down the strong Durkee Foods club and the strong Central Bank nine, surely our followers can feel elated that the home club can really play baseball.

Both Matty Sullivan and Creighton Davies pitched remarkable ball, and, with a little favoritism from Dame Fortune (breaks), would have carried the team to victory; but this tournament is a thing of the past to the lads now. Bring on the San Francisco Semi-Pro Tournament and the Recreation Double A Winter League and watch our smoke. That is their motto.

Captain Carrasco excelled at bat in this big time tournament with an average of 572, as well as receiving and executing twelve remarkable and fast plays.

Johnny Vasquez at short handled twelve difficult chances, completing eleven of these with that skillful ease for which he is noted. While Johnny dropped in his batting average, he still hit the horsehide for 286.

Snooks Nelder batter the old apple at a 500 clip, but when Snooks made that costly error in right field his glory dwindled somewhat.

Bill Kirby was hitting at a 333 clip, but this lad's erratic fielding and base running played an important part in both defeats.

All in all, the experience the boys received through their entry in this great tournament will show results in the future.

As space will not permit a detailed account of both games, the play by play report of the first game only is printed. The play by play report of the second game will be published next week.

Details of the Daly City Tanforan vs. Martin's East Side game:

LESSON SERMON OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

In all Christian Science churches, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., a Lesson-Sermon will be read Sunday, September 8, on the subject "Man."

The Golden Text will be: "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is " (Jer. 17: 7). Bible selections will include the following passage from II Peter 1: 2, 3: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."

Passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will also be included, which read as follows: "Man and his Maker are correlated in divine Science, and real consciousness is cognizant only of the things of God. . . . Harmony in man is as real and immortal as in music. Discord is unreal and mortal. . . . When we learn in Science how to be perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect, thought is turned into new and healthy channels,—towards the contemplation of things immortal and away from materiality to the Principle of the universe, including harmonious man" (p. 276).

PICTURE SHOWS BANK RELATIONS WITH BUSINESS

Local Citizens Given Opportunity To Learn Benefits Of Financial Institution

A complete motion picture review of Transamerica Corporation and its subsidiaries was presented to Colma last night at the Columbus Hall at the first local showing of the sound film "Transamerica."

The picture represents a new departure in the field of public relations for financial institutions. The Giannini interests, pioneers of branch banking, first in the field in bank advertising, have shown the way in the employment of sound motion pictures as a means for financial organizations to take the public into their confidence.

"Transamerica" cast new light on the operations of a branch bank by showing in detail the services performed by Bank of America and demonstrating its co-operation with the agriculture, business and industry of California. It also showed the scope of Transamerica's branch banks in Oregon, Nevada and in Italy.

The functions of Transamerica's insurance subsidiaries, Occidental Life Insurance Company and Pacific National Fire Insurance Company, were also outlined, as well as the real estate companies, California Lands, Inc., and Capital Company.

The ramifications of a corporation so large that a billion dollar bank is only one of its parts are necessarily widespread, but in less than half an hour the motion picture did much to clarify them for the audience which attended last night's performance.

In addition to outlining the purposes and aims of Transamerica, the picture gave the audience the opportunity to view all subsidiaries in operation, and to see the executives who determine the policies of Transamerica Corporation.

Party Prize Frock for a Little Girl

"They all liked my new frock!" this little girl will be certain to say when she returns from the party—a triumphant little miss. For this dress is different. It boasts a double yoke. The second yoke is cut all in one with the pleats. And puffed sleeves are a deliciously youthful fashion. Moreover, young mothers will find this pattern no trouble at all to follow—they'll probably make it up in several cotton prints. The cost will be nominal. We suggest a sprig print or possibly a small polka dot pattern—in gay colors! Bloomers are included in the pattern.

Pattern 9259 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 4 requires 2½ yards 36-inch fabric. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York, N. Y.

TERRIBLE! TERRIBLE!

Did you hear the joke I played on my wife?"

"Not unless you refer to your getting her to marry you."

Big Bread-Winner

First Boarder—The cockroaches in this house are a busy lot. They never quit work.

Second Boarder—Well, you must remember that a cockroach can't afford to be idle. They say every one of them has a wife and about 10,000 children to support.

Convenience

"Do you read everything that is said about you?"

"Yes," said Senator Sorghum. "It saves me trouble. When I want to use bad language I find it before my eyes. I don't need to bother with a book of synonyms."

Half Started

June—Then you think he hasn't the nerve to propose?

Jane—Yes; asking pa's income and ma's disposition and my age seems as far as he dares to go.

Don't Be a Sucker! Modern Mining Is Job for Experts

Gold is tricky stuff. Its very name does things to the sanest mind. The sands of Nevada, the gullies of California are dotted with the bones of people who thought they could outsmart hard rock. Don't be one of them! Modern mining, whether it's done down a shaft or with a pan, is a job for experts.

Yes, I know! You "heard about a man who saw a man who knew a man who . . ." Don't be a sucker! Language is cheap—there are a million tales like that. The plain truth is that only misery awaits the modern tenderfoot prospector. There is, beyond all doubting, "gold in them thar hills"—far more than was ever taken out of them. There are fortunes in the vast dumps of "tailings," with the wasted gold which crude mining processes could not recover. Fortunes, too, in the almost endless deposits of low-grade ore which it was impossible to work profitably with the original mills. And only God knows how deeply the Lode dips or what lies hidden along the way: But:

There is NO "gold rush" going on in California today—nor any easily reached deposit of gold which would warrant such a rush. Thousands of gold seekers have come to the Mother Lode in the past five years. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in opening the old mines, which are now working full blast. But there is no wild stampede nor reason for one. No matter what you hear or read, hang on to that fact.—Elsie Robinson in Cosmopolitan.

CREDIT PLAN FOR FINANCING AUTOMOBILES

Announcement of a new credit plan for financing the purchase of new and used automobiles on a low cost basis was made today by L. M. Giannini, president of Bank of America.

The most novel innovation of the plan is the provision for the issuance of a letter of credit to the prospective automobile purchaser, entitling him to shop for his car as a cash buyer.

"The principles of automobile financing are now sufficiently well established to permit conservative banks to make this service a part of their regular credit facilities," said Giannini.

"We feel that the financing of automobile purchases offers a safe field for the employment of loanable bank funds, and that the credit of the automobile buyer who deals on an installment basis has been established by his financial record in this state.

"Believing the public is entitled to the best possible service and the most liberal terms of credit in financing automobile purchases, we are making our Automobile Letter of Credit Plan available to customers and non-customers at all the 425 branches of our bank.

"We anticipate that the public will be prompt in accepting this new, low cost means of finaning the purchase of automobiles, and that sales of cars throughout California will be stimulated accordingly."

Details of the bank's Automobile Letter of Credit Plan were explained by Carl E. Newman, manager of the Daly City branch of Bank of America.

"The procedure of this new type of financing is simple," he said. "A prospective purchaser of a new or a used car applies at any of our branches for the Automobile Letter of Credit. Knowing the approximate value of the car he plans to trade in, or the amount of the down payment he wishes to make, it is merely a matter of arithmetic to determine the balance necessary to obtain the car he desires.

"An Automobile Letter of Credit is issued for the amount necessary to complete the purchase. This letter of credit is in the hands of the purchaser when he selects his car, and permits him to deal as a cash buyer.

"The bank pays the dealer cash for the net balance due him and the buyer then repays the bank in monthly installments, on a cost basis computed on extremely favorable terms. As he makes the purchase with the status of a cash buyer, he need make his credit information available only to the bank.

"Our new Automobile Letter of Credit Plan already has been announced to the personnel of all the branches of Bank of America and has met with an enthusiastic response."

A new afternoon attraction will be given before the grand stands Sunday afternoon when draft teams, Shetland ponies and other events on the horse show program will combine in a matinee performance. It is said the building of the establishment to house the concession will cost $25,000 to construct, and the sponsors have stated that local labor will be exclusively employed in the construction and that no food for refreshment will be served on the premises.
